Understanding the Difference Between Worker Checks International Police Checks and Immigration Requirements

If you need an international police clearance, it's important to understand the difference between background screening and immigration-specific police certificates.

Not for Visa or Immigration Purposes

Worker Checks International Police Checks are not suitable for visa or immigration applications.

Our international checks are designed for employment, rental, or general background screening — not for submissions to the Department of Home Affairs or foreign immigration authorities.

Immigration-related police clearances often have additional requirements, such as:

- Direct application through the relevant foreign police authority or embassy
- Paper-based authentication or apostille/legalisation
- Specific reference numbers or verification codes required by Home Affairs
- Some jurisdictions will also require fingerprint data for processing

For official immigration processing, you must obtain your police clearance directly from the issuing country's government authority or a provider approved by that nation's consulate.

What Worker Checks International Police Checks Are Used For

Worker Checks offers International Police Checks for legitimate non-immigration screening purposes, including:

- Employment or contractor background screening
- Rental applications
- Teacher or student verification
- Healthcare, childcare, or compliance onboarding

These checks are conducted 100 % online through your Worker Checks portal, using secure biometric ID verification and digital document delivery.

Before You Proceed

If you're unsure whether your purpose is employment-related or immigration-related, confirm with the requesting organisation before applying.
You can also contact Worker Checks Support for guidance at ask@workerchecks.com.

> Important: Worker Checks cannot issue refunds for International Police Checks purchased in error for immigration or visa applications. Please review our Refunds & Return Policy
